Siva Jnana Bodham

Śaivasiddhānta has been a source of inspiration and solace for many souls even in the present age where people are confused by various atheistic and unorthodox doctrines. But Śaivasiddhānta has survived to this day for it is appreciated for its logical analysis of the purpose of life and its solution to man's trials and tribulations. At this juncture, it will be worthwhile to examine briefly the foundational texts of Śaivasiddhānta philosophy. In every philosophical school, including non-theistic philosophies, there is a study of pramāṇam or 'means of knowledge'. pramāṇam or 'means of knowledge' is any instrument that reveals knowledge. For example, to reveal light we need eyes. Therefore, eyes serve as a pramāṇam for light. In Śaivasiddhānta, Śiva is said to be One who is both immanent and transcendent. Therefore, to know Śiva, pramāṇam-s such as perception and inference alone are insufficient. Hence it calls for the need of a valid pramāṇa through which we can know Śiva and his nature. To our rescue come the Veda and Śaivāgama-s as the pramāṇa to remove this spiritual ignorance. One unique characteristic of a valid pramāṇa is that it should not have a human author for the reason that it may contain the defects due to the limitations of the human mind. But the Vedas and Śaivagāma-s are different in that the omniscient Śiva reveals them out of compassion, to save us from this life of samsāra. Therefore, the Vedas and the Śaivāgama-s together form the principal pramāṇa and authority for Śaivasiddhānta. They are the bedrock of the whole Śaivasiddhānta philosophy and are seen as the pramāṇa for studying the nature of pati, paśu and pāśa. We can find the importance given to the Śaivāgama-s and Veda-s even in the Thirumurai-s where we find many verses in praise of the Veda & Saivagamas, the principal scriptures of Śaiva-siddhānta.

However, we should also not underestimate the value of the body of secondary scriptures that have a human origin but also accepted as authoritative scriptures in the Śaivasiddhānta tradition. The Thirumurai-s and other canonical texts such as Sankarpa Nirakaranam, Siva Jnana Siddhiyar, etc. fall under this category of scriptures. They reveal the vision of the principal scriptures and further compliment it by providing many means to understand the core philosophy of Śaivasiddhānta. Hence they should not be relegated to the status of less important scriptures but rather we should look at both the principal and secondary scriptures with reverence. If the Veda & Śaivāgama-s are milk, then the secondary scriptures are ghee. Without milk there can be no ghee but at the same time milk cannot replace ghee in tending a fire. Similarly, although the secondary scriptures are a repository of the essential vision of the Veda & Śaivāgama-s, in no way should they be seen as inferior as their purpose is to convey the vision of the Veda & Śaivāgama-s in simpler and understandable manner. Only with such a perspective will we be able to appreciate both the principal and the secondary scriptures without biases and appreciate them for what they are valued for.

According to Śaivasiddhānta scholars, the Siva Jnana Bodham is a translation of an extract from the Raurava Āgama, thus making it part of the corpus of authoritative scriptures. This English translation of the Siva Jnana Bodham with commentaries of Sivagra Yogi, the 2nd pontiff of Suryanaar Koil Adheenam written in the 16th century is a priceless gem for all Śaiva-siddhāntins.

With the blessings of Lord Śiva, we are very pleased to release the Siva Jnana Bodham with the commentary of Śri Śivāgrayogin, on the Grha Pravesham of our “Sri Aghora Sivachariya Turst” president Śivaśrī R. Gangadharan Bhattar and Smt. Gowri.

My Namaskaram to my parents Sivasri R.Gangadhara Bhattar and Smt. Gowri for the generous donation for releasing this book. On behalf of the trust, I would like to convey my heartfelt thanks to Sri T Ganesan for translating this work into English and to the Bala Offset printers for doing a great piece of work.

PREFACE

The Sanskrit text of Śivajñānabodha considered to be the quintessence of Śaivasiddhānta is not so much well-known while the Tamil text, namely, Civañānapōtam of Meykaṇṭar is being studied along with its commentaries. Though there are nearly seven commentaries (both brief and elaborate) on Śivajñānabodha except one or two others have not been published. The Laghuṭīkā – brief and simple commentary – is by Śivāgrayogin. In the domain of Śaivasiddhānta he is relatively well-known through his commentaries on the Śivajñānabodha and a manual on the śaiva monastic rites (Śaivasamnyāsapaddhati).

The tradition of Śivāgra

As is well known to scholars of Śaivasiddhānta, the author, Sivagrayogin (Śivāgra in short), who lived in the middle of the 16th centurey, comes in a tradition of a distinct and illustrious school of Śaivasiddhānta. His paramaguru, Sadāśivaśivācārya, is the first commentator on the Sanskrit text of the Śivajñānabodhasūtra which has come down to us (This text has been first published in the journal of GOML, vol.20. There is subsequent edition in Grantha characters with Tamil meaning published by the Tamilnadu Arcaka Asoociation). It is also well-known that Śaivasannyāsapaddhati composed by Śivāgra deals elaborately with the ritual of initiation into monasticism according to Śaivasiddhānta system. But in fact he is not the first to compose such a text. For, before him, Isvarasiva who, again, is the great-grand teacher of Sadasiwasivacharya had already composed a Sannyāsakārikā (referred in the commentary mentioned above). This is one of the important contributions of Śivāgra in the domain of śaiva ritual system.

The second one is his elaboration and subsequent establishment of an independent Śaivasiddhānta system in Tamilnadu as a parallel to that of the Meykanṭār which is based on the Civañānapōtam in Tamil. Śivāgra comes in the tradition of Vāmadeva (who is the “seer” of the Pañcākṣaramantra which occurs in the 8th anuvāka of the Śatarudrīya for which section also Vāmadeva is the “sage” – Rṣi. This fact is referred to by Śivāgra in his Śivaneriprakāśam, verse, 6) whereas Meykanṭār belongs to that of Nandi (Nandiparamparai). In fact Śivāgra belongs to the tradition of Śaivasiddhānta system that was prevalent in Varanasi with a monastery on the Maṇikarṇikā Ghat in circa 15th century as mentioned in the introductory portion of the commentary of Sadāśivaśivācārya referred earlier.

The Laghuṭīkā which is now critically edited has been once published in the Pandit Series Vol. XXIX, from Banares Sanskrit College, in 1907. This edition contains a lot of errors and wrong readings as it was, probably, based on single manuscript source.

I believe that the present publication of Laghuṭīkā will definitely be a great service to the field of Śaivasiddhānta literature and particularly to the scholarly world.

I express my thanks to the authorities of the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Chennai and that of the French Institute, Pondicherry for permitting me to use their manuscripts for this critical edition. It is a great pleasure for me to thank, congratulate and encourage Śivaśrī G. Kartik for his initiative and sincere efforts in undertaking to publish this valuable Śaivasiddhānta text. I fervently pray to God Śiva for his prosperity and unflinching devotion and constant endeavour to the promotion and publication of such valuable and rare texts of Śaivasiddhānta.

The present edition is based on four manuscripts (3 in palm-leaf and one in paper) and the above mentioned printed text.

SCHOOLS OF ŚAIVASIDDHĀNTA

Śaivasiddhānta system is not a unified singular philosophical thought as many of us think. In its course of development for more than a millennium its current has absorbed many a new thought form from other equally popular systems and from different regions of India. The earliest form can be called the classical one which is directly and wholely based on the canonical texts called the Āgama. These texts are believed to have been spoken (given out) by Śiva Himself to different group of sages who were thus considered to be the earliest recipients of this body of knowledge. The earliest system builders mainly concentrated on that portion of the Āgama-s which deal with the philosophocal concepts (called jñānapāda or vidyāpāda) and wrote their treatises. These are the texts that have come down to us and aid us in knowing the earliest developments of the philosophy of the Śaivasiddhānta. The authors whose works have survived are Sadyojyoti, Bhojadeva, Nārāyaṇakanṭha, Rāmakaṇṭha I and II, Śrīkaṇṭha, and Aghoraśiva. Of them Sadyojoyoti belongs to the early part of the 8th century and Aghoraśiva to the middle of the 12th century. We also hear about one Ugrajyoti the teacher of Sadyojoyoti and another by name Bṛhaspati who were predecessors of Sadyojoyoti. Therefore the evolution and spread of classical Śaiva-siddhānta can approximately be placed between the 7th to the 12th centuries. In a way Aghoraśiva is the last in that tradition who lived in the temple town of Chidambaram and whose forefathers hailed from Northern Bengal (Dakṣiṇārāḍha as it was called then). Having thus given a very brief outline of the period and times of the Śaivasiddhānta it will certainly be useful to mention the texts and their authors who were the early system-builders:

Tattvaprakāśa (TP)	Bhojadeva
Tattvasamgraha (TatSam)	Sadyojoyoti
Tattvatrayanirṇaya (TatN)	"
Bhogakārikā (BK)	"
Mokṣakārikā (MK)	"
Paramokṣanirāsakārikā (PMK)	"

Nādakārikā (NK) BhaṭṭaRāmakanṭha

Ratnatraya (RT)

Śrīkanṭha

Apart from these eight texts that are well-known under the name Aṣṭaprakaraṇa there are other texts such as the Svāyambhuvasūtrasaṃgraha (SvS) with the commentary of Sadyojyoti, Nareśvaraparīkṣā of Sadyojyoti with commentary Prakāśa by Rāmakanṭha II the commentaries on the Mṛgendrāgama by Nārāyaṇakanṭha, those on the Maṭāṅgapārameśvarāgama, the Sārdhatriśatikālottarā-gama and on the Kiraṇāgama by Rāmakanṭha II; add to these the explanatory commentary by Aghoraśiva on most of these texts without which it would be very difficult to understand them.

Let us now take up the analysis of the philosophical tenets of the system. In the words of the *Tattvaprakāśa*¹ there are three main categories or principles (tattva): Pati, Paśu and Pāśa. Pati is Śiva; Paśu-s are the individual selves and the pāśa includes five categories which are the bondages.

Pati (Śiva):

Since the phenomenal world is made of parts it is an effect; therefore it requires a conscious, all-powerful supreme agent without whom it can not come into existence². Such an agent is eternally pure; all-pervasive and possesses the power of knowledge and action (jñānakriyāsvabhāva)³. He is always accompanied by this power (śakti) which is inseparable from Him. He is ever-active (satatodita)⁴. Śiva, naturally, is beyond any change; as the Lord of the universe He performs five cosmic functions: creation (sr̥sti), maintenance (sthiti), reabsorption (saṃhāra), concealing (tirobhāva), and bestowing grace (anugraha)⁵. He performs all these acts with His Śakti that serves as the instrument⁶. For, any action can not be accomplished without the necessary instrument; and the instrument of Śiva can not but be the conscious Śakti⁷ which is inherent in and hence not external to Him⁸.

Śiva is said to have the five mantra-s as His body. They are: Īśāna, Tatpuruṣa, Aghora, Vāmadeva and Sadyojāta. Now according to the Mṛgendrāgama these mantra-s which are His śakti-s act as His body; according to Śrīkumāra, a commentator on TP, all mantra-s which are of the form of nāda, bindu, word (pada), syllable (varṇa) and sentence (vākya) serve as the body of Śiva⁹. Anyway Śiva's possession of a body is only for the sake of His devotees as the Pauṣkarāgama¹⁰ says so that they are able to meditate on Him and secure highest bliss. He, like a yogin, takes on many forms¹¹; one such form is that of the Guru which is purely due to His grace on the living creatures.

In general Śiva is spoken to be in three states: the state in which the potential power to create and do all the five acts lie dormant (śakta); the next one wherein the power has æopened outÆ û unmimisantî û filling Śiva with highest bliss and ready for creation (udyukta); the third state where He starts creation, etc. with His Śakti (pravṛtta). These three are also called Laya, Bhoga and Adhikāra respectively. To sum up, in the words of Mṛgendarāgama (Vp. 4:15): Even during mahāpralaya Śiva makes the karma and āṇavamala get ripened, imparts the knowledge for those who are fit, conceals by His concealing power those who are fit for that and makes the powers of Māyā ready to manifest in the next creation, etc. Thus, Śiva, full of mercy and grace on the bound selves continuously engages Himself in those acts that benefit them the most.

Paśu (Individual Self):

The individual self is also an eternal entity, without form, possessing very little knowledge and action; it is under the spell of māyā and is engaged itself in finding the ways for enjoyment¹². There are three classes of selves: Vijñānākala, Pralayākala and Sakala. These selves experience pleasure or pain granted by Śiva (with utmost grace)¹³ according to their karma. When the mala covering their power of knowledge and action gets ripened Śiva coming in the form of guru¹⁴ performs the necessary initiation to them and makes them follow the divine path whereby they get back their original nature. This ultimate nature is characterised by complete similarity (samānatā) with Śiva. Thus the innate nature of the self is manifested only by the grace of Śiva and thereby becomes equal to Śiva¹⁵. The only difference, therefore, between the liberated self and Śiva is that while this greatness (māhātmya) is inseparable and innate to Śiva from beginningless period the liberated self gets it by the grace of Śiva and is, therefore, granted by Him¹⁶.

Pāśa (Bondage)

This consists of three impurities (mala): 1) Āṇava – that which beginninglessly shroud the innate power of knowledge and action of the self and which exists as the verdigris in copper and as the outer cover of the paddy¹⁷. 2) Karma û that which consists of good and bad actions (dharma and adharma) and it is multifarious; it also accrues to the self beginninglessly¹⁸. 3) Māyā û that positive material which is the cause of the entire phenomenal world. In other words it is that which transforms into all the material substance of the world¹⁹. In the words of Tattvasamgraha Māyā is the source of the entire universe and the basis for its creation, maintenance and dissolution²⁰. Apart from these three the classical Śaivasiddhānta texts such as the Tattvaprakāśa add the concealing power of Śiva (Tirodhānaśakti) which at the beginning conceals the power of self and after the śaktipāta becomes the power of grace of Śiva (Anugrahaśakti) and the subtle Māyā (sūkṣma-māyā) as two more and thereby make Pāśa into five.

Liberation or release of the self from this transmigration (samsāra) is effected by Śiva who, as mentioned earlier, due to His supreme grace takes the form of Guru and according to the state of Śaktipāta on the self performs the necessary initiation (Dīkṣā) on it and makes it regain its supreme power of knowledge and action and thereby equality with Him²¹.

The Śaivasiddhānta of Tamilnadu

The Śaivasiddhānta school of religion and philosophy that is now in vogue in Tamilnadu can, for all practical purposes, be called the Śivajñānabodha school. This text has come to stay as the basis of the Śaivasiddhānta system and the entire range of texts is based on that of Śivajñānabodha (in Tamil) which is considered to have been composed by Meykaṇṭār in the middle of the 12th century, A.D.

But it should be noted that there were a few independent śaiva texts in Tamil such as Ñāṇamirtam written in the 12th century (before Meykaṇṭār) that expound methodically the doctrines of the *Śaivāgama-s*²². According to tradition and as expressed by most of the commentators Meykaṇṭār has given the Tamil version from the Sanskrit original which, again, is held to be part of the Rauravāgama.

The Civañānapōtam contains many ideas in a seminal form. To briefly outline the points discussed in this text: Śiva is the supreme Creator, Protector and Destroyer of the universe which is an effect; He absorbs the already existing universe and then creates it and hence this universe has Śiva as its source.

Śiva performs all His acts – creation, etc. – in close association with His Supreme power – Śakti – which is non different from Him and does not exist separate from Him.

A conscious agent, the individual self, exists separately from the body-mind complex and has the continuous experience in all the states – waking, dream, deep sleep and beyond.

The self in close association with the internal organ, the mind, experiences five states of consciousness; its innate power of knowledge and action is very much restricted by mala – the impurity – which exists in association with the self since beginningless time.

Śiva is the supreme Agent, the driving force behind all the acts of the self. On that account He neither undergoes any change nor experiences pleasure nor pain. For, He performs all acts just as the magnet activates the iron kept in its proximity without itself getting affected in any way.

Śiva is neither perceivable objectively by the self (through the sense-organs) nor completely imperceptible. He is to be realised as different from both in one's own inner self.

The material world which is inert does not shine in the presence of Śiva who is supreme consciousness; nor does Śiva 'know' it objectively as He is all-knowing and omnipresent. Therefore only the individual self knows both Śiva and the world of matter.

The self overpowered by the sense organs completely forgets its real nature. The preceptor (Guru) by appropriate spiritual instructions frees it from the clutches of sense organs and thereby makes it realise its actual nature which is non-difference from Śiva.

Realising Śiva at the highest level of its innermost consciousness and abandoning its association with the fleeting world of matter the self meditates on the holy pañcākṣaramantra.

Such a realised self fully conscious of his union with Śiva and existing completely under Śiva's control becomes free from mala, māyā and other impurities.

Just as the self makes the eyes see so also Śiva makes the self see; in other words, the self perceives by the help of Śiva. Therefore the self should be devoted to Śiva, its supreme bene-factor.

To attain to the state of liberation the self may resort to holy men, wear their attire and serve in the temples of Śiva.

As is evident we do not find any mention of typical a-gamic ideas such as Śiva acting as only the efficient cause of the universe, initiation as the sole means of liberation and mukti a state of equality with Śiva, to mention a few. Further Civañānapōtam mentions only the Pañcākṣara (அஞ்செழுத்து, குத்திரம் 8) and there is reference in this text to the prāsādamantra one of the distinguishing features of the Śaivāgama-s. Then regarding the means for attaining mukti it enjoins the aspirant to take up worship and service in Śiva temples which is not explicitly mentioned in the Śaivāgama-s and in the Kashmirian Śaivasiddhānta texts referred to earlier. Moreover according to the 11th cūttiram of Civañānapōtam Śiva involves Himself in all the activities of the self through and through by His mere intention சங்கற்பமாத்திரையின்கீ and moved by extreme compassion Himself performs all actions for the sake of the individual selves. Therefore the self is advised to be always conscious of this fact and be devoted to Śiva²³ who is its supreme benefactor (Ātmopakāraka). Now this very idea is something unique to the system of Śivajñānabodha which is not mentioned in the available Śaivāgama texts nor in the classical Śaivasiddhānta texts.

This in a nutshell is the basic doctrines of the school of Śivajñānabodha

Later development of ideas:

The commentaries and other texts such as the Civañāṇacittiyār, Civappirakācam, etc. that came after in successive centuries is witness to the progress of philosophical ideas with elaboration based on the Śaivāgama-s, assimilation of new ideas from other systems of philosophy (such as the Advaita Vedānta, Śaivaviśiṣṭādvaita of Śrīkanṭha) and precision. For example, the second sūtra of the Śivajñānabodham merely states that Śiva exists in a relation of non-difference (ananyatva) with the world through His vyāpti. But the Sivañāṇacittiyār elaborates its commentary on this sūtra with the theory of evolution of all the tattva-s based entirely on the Āgamas. In the same way, the eighth sūtra speaks about Śiva's bestowing grace on the devotee by coming in the form of a Guru; this Cittiyār elaborates with different types of dīkṣā which, again, are entirely based on the Āgamas.

The classical Saivasiddhānta system which we briefly saw above claims itself to be based strictly on the Śaivāgama-s whereas the Śivajñānabodha school claims the Veda-s, Śivāgama-s of the Siddhānta system and also the Tirumurai as authority. It is in the Tirukkalirruppaṭiyār which is considered to be earlier to the Civañānapōtam that we see an attempt to correlate the mystical and devotional utterances of the Nāyanāmār-s and the some of the doctrines of the Śaivāgama-s.

Commentaries on Śivajñānabodha

The text consists of 12 verses composed in anuṣṭubh metre. According to most of the commentators this text of Śivajñānabodha is part of the Rauravāgama which is one of the 28 mūlāgama-s of the Saivasiddhānta system. But the published text²⁴ (in 3 volumes) of this Āgama does not contain this text. Apart from the Saivasiddhānta theologians we have the evidence of Appayadīkṣita (circa. 16th century) who cites in his commentary Śivārkamanidīpikā on the Śrīkaṇṭhabhāṣya II.i.16 the second sūtra of the Śivajñānabodha and calls it Āgama. The third volume of the Rauravāgama in its 58th chapter refers to a Śivajñānabodhaśāstra to be given to the disciple as part of *jñānadīksā*²⁵.

In order to explain the philosophical points and the religious practices briefly touched upon in the Śivajñānabodha commentaries were written on it by different authors such as Sadāśivaśivācārya, Śivagrayogin, Nigamajñānadeśika, Jñānaprakāśa. The earliest one that has come down to us dates from the 15th century which was composed by Sadāśivaśivācārya who, according to tradition is the Paramaguru of Śivāgrayogī; after this we have the commentary called Śivajñānabodhopanyāsa of Nigamajñānadeśika who is an important author of the 16th century. He has contributed a lot for the propagation and enrichment of Saivasiddhānta doctrines and for the elucidation of philosophical points.

Nigamajñānadeśika is one of the senior contemporaries of Śivāgrayogī. He comes in the tradition of great Saivasiddhānta preceptors who are authors of many works both in Sanskrit and Tamil; he himself has written in both the languages. In all probability Nigamajñānadeśika is none other than Marai-ñānadeśikar who is one of the commentators of the Civajñānacittiyār of Aruṇandiśivācārya. He was the disciple of another Maraiñāna (=Maraiñānasambandhar =Vedajñāna) who has composed the texts in Tamil such as Paramopadeśam, *Caivacamayaneri*²⁶, Aikkiyaviyal, Kamalālayapurāṇam and the Tamil translation of the Śivadharṣottara. As the period of Maraiñānasambandhar is said to be the middle of the 16th century his disciple Nigamajñānadeśika can be placed in the same period. The monastery wherein he and his preceptor Marañānacampantar were said to have lived in Chidambaram was variously called Guhai matam or Kankaiṭti matam which does not exist now. He cites profusely from the Āgamic literature in his other works such as the *Ātmārthapūjāpaddhati*²⁷, *Dīksādarśa*²⁸ *Laghu-tīkā*²⁹ on the Vyomavyāpistava of Bhaṭṭa Rāma-kaṇṭha II and in *Śivajñānasiddhisvapakṣadrṣṭāntasamgraha*³⁰ the last one giving parallels from the Āgamic texts for each verse of the Civa-ñānacittiyār.

In his commentary called *Śivajñānabodhōpanyāsa*³¹ one comes across some original and independent views on a few of the important concepts such as mukti, relation between the self and Śiva in the state of mukti which he forcefully establishes though at variance with other commentaries.

One of the striking views that distinguishes Nigamajñānadeśika from other authors is that the liberated self is held to experience its own innate bliss and not that of Śiva. In fact he echos the view of his teacher which, he says³², has been explained in Paramopadeśam a brief tract in Tamil exclusively to prove this doctrine.

The present commentary which is now edited is called Laghuṭīkā written by Śivagrayogin. This luminary in the firmament of Śaivasiddhanta lived in the 16th century; he belongs to the Skandaparamparā of Śaivasiddhānta system. He is a prolific writer composing commentaries and independent treatises both in Sanskrit and Tamil. To the same text of Śivajñānabodha he has written two other commentaries: the Vistrtabhāṣya and the Brhatṭīkā. Laghuṭīkā, as its name indicates, is very brief just explaining the sutras and giving out the essential points. There are no long discussions or refutation of opponent's views. The explanations are simple and direct; at many places Śivāgrayogī shows the influence of his paramaguru Sadāśivācārya.

Important views of Śivāgrayogī

According to Śivāgrayogī the entire text of Śivajñānabodha contains in a nutshell all the essential details of the philosophical doctrines, the means to attain the highest good, namely, mukti. He holds that mere dīkṣā is not enough for attaining mukti; it should be supplemented with hearing the scriptures – śravāṇa (Veda and Āgama), manana – reasoning and nididhyāsana – contemplation. Now, this is evidently the same as described in the Upaniṣadic texts and in the Vedānta system. In his commentary on the 10th sūtra Śivāgrayogī states that the liberated self experiences śivānanda; the word “Svānubhūtimān” of the text is explained by him as the experience of supreme bliss (paramānanda)³³. Then at the end of the commentary on the last sūtra he says that the text of Śivajñānabodha speaks about the caryāmārga in the 12th sūtra while the 11th one the kriyā, the 10th yoga and the 9th sūtra explains the jñānamārga. This view is also found in the Sadāśivācārya’s Vṛtti. Regarding the Pañcākṣarīmantra Śivāgra states that the follower of Veda recites the pranava (which also contains five syllables) while the Śaiva recites the Prāsādamantra which view is also found in Sadāśivācārya’s Vṛtti.

Because the world possessing the female, male and neuter [bodies] is seen to be an effect there is an Agent who having dissolved [the world] creates [it]; He is Hara, the overlord. (1)

Its meaning: Because the effect is seen [that is,] since its being an effect is observed, of the world – of the mountain, etc. – there exists an agent. How is the effectness of the world [known] ? It is said: because of female, male and neuter [bodies comprising the world,] etc. Here by the words female, male and neuter the respective bodies are meant. By etc. the sense organs [are also included] since they are the important [instruments of knowledge and action for the self] and since they are a mode of the physical body and like them the body is also composed of parts.

What does [He, the agent] do ? It is said – He; [that is] He, the agent after having taken away – destroyed – this world creates it again. Thus the overlordship [of the phenomenal universe] belongs only to the agent of destruction. Thus, because of the above mentioned reason, Hara (Śiva), the one without body and sense organs and possessing the power to destroy all is the overlord, the supreme master. Here by the word asti the uniqueness [of the agent] is indicated. Therefore when [the existence] of the possessor of supreme power to destroy [the created universe] is established it is but logical to hold Him to be the agent of creation, etc. [of the same]. Thus there is non-contradiction with other scriptures in holding that for the very first creation Śiva is the agent and, for the successive ones, Ananta, etc. are the agents.(1)

How does He create ? It is replied – remaining different from [the created world].

Remaining different but non-different through pervasion, the Agent makes the transmigratory existense of the selves according to the karma [of the selves] and through His own [innate] command (the power) inherent in Him. (2)

That agent makes – creates – the transmigration that is, [the instruments for the self, namely,] the body, the sense organs and the world [for enjoying the fruits of action] for the bound selves.

Through what means does He create?

It is replied that through [His] command – His power of knowledge and action – which is of the form of injunction and prohibition.

Is [She,] that power, different from Him ?

No. She abides [in Him] through the relation of inherence and thus non-different from Him. If He creates the transmigratory world according to His own wish then He will be liable to the charge of giving pleasure to some and grief to others and hence partial and ruthless. [To avert such a contingency] it is said that [He creates the world] according to the karma of [the selves]. He creates according to the karma which is of the form of dharma and adharma – righteous and unrighteous actions – and not just by His own wish.

Does He create by remaining non-different from the jīva, the embodied self as held by some ?

No. He does so by remaining different [from the selves]. The difference between the two – the lord and the embodied selves – is to be understood as one is beginninglessly pure while the other [namely, the self] is tainted by mala, the impurity since beginningless period.

[If so] is He also different [from the selves] even in the state of liberation?

No. He [is] non-different [from the self] through pervasion. [That is,] He creates the transmigratory world by remaining non-different from the self through His power of pervasion which is of the form of direct realisation [on the part of the self] of its own non-difference from Śiva. This [realisation] is [the effect of] either the firm knowledge that arises on the removal of the three impurities or of initiation.(2)

Objection: It is said [above] that the Lord creates the transmigratory world for the sake of the bound selves. [Now] where is the proof for the existence of such selves ?

It is replied [in the sūtra] beginning from “Because [of the cognition] of negation”.

Because [of the cognition] of negation; of the feeling of mineness; of consciousness occurring [even] when the sense organs cease functioning; of [absence] of experience in deep sleep and because of the [existence of] knowership in the waking state there exists the conscious self (anu) in the body. (3)

In the physical body there exists the self overpowered by the the impurity [mala] called ānava.

Objection: There is no self at all which is considered to be existing; for, it is like seeing silver in the nacre [which ultimately does not exist there].

In reply it is said because [of the cognition] of negation. itiḥ [means] cognition; cognising as not existing is the cognition of non-existence. On the strength of cognition [of the absence] it is proved that aṇu – the self – exists. Otherwise there will be no counter correlative for the negation.

Objection: Let the self be non-different from the physical body.

Reply: No. Because of the feeling of mineness. The feeling of the sense of mineness is predominant [in all]. Though there are cognitions such as I am stout, etc. it is due to the [mutual] superimposition of non-difference between the self and the physical body. Further there is the cognition [for example] in the form “I, who have enjoyed [the love of] my parents, now, in old age fondle my grand children” resulting in the recognition of a continuous unsublated self [throughout one's life even when the body is in different stages of growth] which strongly goes to prove the existence of a self separate from the physical body.

Objection: [In the face of above arguments] let not the body be the ātman but let the sense organs be so.

Reply: [No.] Because of consciousness occurring [even] when the sense organs cease to function; when the sense organs cease to function in dream there arises knowledge.

Objection: [If so] let the intellect – the knowing faculty – be the ātman.

Reply: [No]. Because of absence of experience in deep sleep. In deep sleep there is no experience at all [of either pleasure or pain and also the absence of knowledge] because of the non functioning of intellect which is the experiencer.

Objection: Let the ātman perish in deep sleep and let it get produced when [the body wakes up].

Reply: No, because of the [existence of] knowership in the waking state. In the waking state there is the clear feeling [in the form of recollection] “I slept very happily”. [Therefore] a conscious self as distinct from void, the [physical and mental] bodies and the sense organs exists both in time and space. [That is, the ātman as an entity exists in a given place and at a particular period of time]. This idea is brought out [in the sūtra] by the word asti [meaning] exists. (3)

Objection: Let the inner organ which is [held to be] continuous and unsublated in waking [and other states] be not the self; [but] what is the evidence for [holding] that the self exists in close contact with them ?

It is replied in the [sūtra] the self etc.

The self though different from the internal organs is associated with them as the king is with the ministers. Therefore [the self] exists in [all] the five states [of existence] with its power of consciousness and action restricted by mala. (4)

As explained earlier the ātman, [called] anu, though different from mind, intellect, etc., remains in close association with them just as the king [is accompanied] by his ministers. For the objection as to how the ātman [which is endowed with the power of consciousness and action] can coexist and function with the products of māyā namely mind, intellect, etc. it is replied [that] his [power of] knowledge and action are covered by mala. [That is] he whose power of knowledge and action is obstructed by the āṇavamala. Because of its beginningless association with mala the ātman always functions in association with the mind and other internal organs. For the same reason the ātman undergoes five states of existence namely waking, dream, deep-sleep, the fourth and the one beyond it. That the ātman experiences the above-mentioned five states and therefore exists as the underlying conscious principle is attested by such general statements as “I who was penniless the other day is rich now” in which the recognition of a unitary conscious entity is evident. (4)

Objection: In the second sūtra it is said that the transmigratory world is created according to the karma of the selves. Let it be performed by the individual self itself instead of a Supreme God.

[In the following sūtra as an answer to this] the dependence of the selves on God is clearly and indirectly brought out – [the sense organs] know, etc.

The sense organs perceive the objects with the help of the self but not by themselves and it [namely, the self, perceives] with [the help of] Śambhu, the Supreme Lord. If, therefore, Śiva is [said to be] liable to change, [we reply] it is not so; [because] He leads the self as does the magnet the iron. (5)

The sense organs [both internal and external] like mind and eye know their respective objects only in so far as they are in association with the conscious self which is their controller and not otherwise; [they do not know anything by themselves] as they are inert. [In the same way] the self also does not come to know anything by himself but knows only when associated with Śambhu, his Lord and Controller, as his power of action knowledge is obstructed by mala.

Objection: Then, in that case, the Lord also will be subject to modifications just as the potter who creates a pot is subject to them.

Reply: No. Though Śiva is the agent of the transmigratory world His not being a subject to the modifications is explained on the analogy of the magnet and the iron: Just as the magnet makes the iron filings move [without itself moving] so also Śiva controls the bound selves. (5)

[To recapitulate]: At the beginning the proof for the existence and the secondary characteristics (taṭasthalakṣaṇa) of Śiva are explained in the first two sūtra-s. As a connected matter the proof for the existence of the bound self – paśu – as well as its characteristics are explained in the third and the fourth sūtra-s. By the fifth one the dependence of the self [on the Lord] and the complete independence of the Lord are explained.

Now [in the sixth one] the primary and fundamental characteristic of the Lord are set forth beginning with – If [it] is invisible, etc.

If [the form of Śiva] is not seen it will be non-existent and if seen it will be insentient. Wisemen know it to be realised as different [from these twotypes]. (6)

For the doubt whether the form of Śambhu, the Lord, is an object of sensory perception or not the second view [that it is not so] is refuted by the statement – if it is not visible, etc. If [His] form is not the object of any sensory perception then He will be non-existent like the horn of a hare. [Then] the first option, [namely, it is an object of sensory perception] is [also] refuted by the statement – if it is an object of sensory perception, etc. If [the Lord's] form is an object of sensory perception then the Lord Himself will be an inert one. For, there is the concomitant relation ‘whichever is an object of sensory perception is inert like a pot’. Different from it – it should be known as beyond visibility and invisibility. That is Śiva's form should be realised in one's own inner self intuitually which means that it is not an objective perception and hence beyond visibility and invisibility. Wise men whose triple bondage has been removed by dīkṣā and whose inner intuition has thus been restored know such to be the form of Śambhu.

It is said, “Beyond the senses, accompanied by His own conscious and infinite energy that has completely forsaken any bondage whatsoever, His (the Lord's) very nature is Yoga”

Also it is said, “Śivatattva is eternal, pure, complete, unique, subtle, supreme, blemishless, inscrutable, non-inert and knowable only in intuitive experience”. (6)

Objection: Let Śiva Himself under His own nescience transmigrate as different selves. Why take the trouble of positing a different self apart from Him ?

[For this] it is replied in the following sūtra beginning with – There is no inert matter, etc.

There is no inert matter [acit] in the presence of consciousness [cit] and these two [cit and acit] do not know each other. He who is the knower of both Śiva and the world is the self different from both. (7)

The inert matter does not shine or act in the presence of pure consciousness, which is Śiva,. For, they both are opposed to each other like darkness and light. [If it is asked] What if they are so ? It is replied – but, etc. They both – consciousness [= the conscious subject] and the inert matter – do not know each other. Śiva who is ever pure, conscious, devoid of ignorance and impartite does not know the [material and hence] unreal world as real. Also the inert world does not know Śiva because it is unconscious and [also because] experience is a quality of consciousness. Therefore [as a logical conclusion] a knower – experiencer – of both the inert material world as well as of Śiva [is to be accepted]. Here it should be clearly understood that the individual self experiences the material world when it is under the control of the mala whereas it experiences Śiva when the mala is removed.

Objection: As the individual self also is conscious, [like Śiva] how the inert matter shines [or acts] in its presence ?

Reply: True. But because of the beginningless ānavamala which covers the innate power of [consciousness and action of the self] the experience of matter by the individual self is possible. Thus there is no contradiction. [To sum up,] the existence of a separate self as an experiencer of both Śiva and the inert matter should be accepted. (7)

Now the attainment liberation from bondage by grace of the preceptor is set forth in the following sūtra beginning with – having lived, etc.

“Having lived with the hunters, [namely,] the senses, you do not know yourself”- thus taught by the guru the blessed one [realising himself to be] non-different [from Śiva] attains to His state [holy feet] after abandoning [the senses].

The fortunate one – the aspirant endowed with the wealth which is an intense longing for liberation, etc. – having remained [in close association for a long time] with the sense organs which are like the hunters because of giving misery [to the self] and also because of not following injunctions and prohibitions [of the scriptures] when taught by the preceptor who is Śiva Himself that “You do not know your real nature which is non-different from Śiva the Omniscient Omnipotent Existence-Knowledge-Bliss absolute” and having thereby completely abandoned the [shackles of] the sense organs [both internal and external] and the twenty-four tattva-s, the seven māyātattva-s that control them and the five evolutes of bindu which [in turn] control the māyātattva-s with the full recognition of his non-difference from Śiva attains to the highest abode of Śiva – feels himself to have attained the nature of Śiva. [This is] just as someone having forgotten the necklace worn on his own neck and therefore thinking it to have been lost and later when shown by another person feels it to have been got back.

Here is a legend: Once upon a time a certain child of a king due to fear from enemies was forced to live among the hunters in the forest. Thinking himself also to be a hunter for a long time he was shown later by his father [the king] who came to the forest that he was really a prince and not a hunter and [thereby] got back his kingdom. (8)

It has been said before that [by the grace of] the guru [the self] attains to His state. That mere initiation by the guru alone is not the means for liberation but the attainment of His [= Śiva's] feet is by the realisation caused on the removal of mala which again is effected by hearing [the scriptures], etc. is explained in the sūtra – by the vision of consciousness, etc.

Having realised the Lord in one's own self through the vision of consciousness, having abandoned the mirage of worldly existence and having attained the shade of Śiva's feet the wise one should contemplate on the five [sacred] syllables (9).

The wise one: His mind is clear because it has completely forsaken the material world and fully devoted to Śiva. It should be understood that it is of the form of clear realisation attained by constant meditation that is the result of reasoning and hearing the Āgama texts which are taught by the guru and which proclaim the [essential] non-difference of the self from Śiva. Such a person having abandoned the mirage of worldly existence – the mental modes are nothing but the worldly knowledge which is likened to a mirage. As the worldly knowledge is incapable of removing the triple misery – ādhyātmika, ādhidaivika and ādhibhautika – [that the self experiences] it is likened to a mirage. Having foresaken [the mental modes] : Such foresaking occurs when the mala is removed by initiation [dīkṣā].

What does he do then ?

It is replied – by the vision of cit. Having seen which is nothing but experiencing one's non-difference from Śiva, the Lord, in his own self by the vision that is completely permeated by the supreme consciousness [= cit]. By the [above statement] the meditation [of the form] “I am He who is Śiva”.is explained.

Then – having attained to the shade of Śiva's holy feet: That which is attained or reached is here [called] padam; here it is Śiva Himself who is realised as non-different from one's self is [called] padam – state.

Having attained to that state which is [nothing but] His power of grace and which is like [a cool] shade. The state of Śiva is spoken of as a cool shade because it is capable of removing the triple misery mentioned earlier. Having attained to that state he should meditate on the five-syllabled mantra – the pañcākṣarī. Here [in this statement] it should be added “[he] should recite Śiva” just as in the statement “enter the cake” it is added “eat the house” [meaning enter the house and eat the cake]. Its meaning is this: [One] should recite the pañcākṣarīmantra and meditate on Śiva. The group of five syllables is [called] pañcākṣarī; those letters are na, etc. Or by pañcākṣarī the meaning denoted by those letters is referred. They are: Śiva, Śakti, the self, mala and the power that removes [the mala].

It is said,

“Śiva is in the middle, then [His] Śakti, then the self, before that the bondage, namely, mala and before that the power that removes it”.

The meaning is this: Among the five letters [of the pañcāksarī mantra] the middle one, śi denotes Śiva; next to it, va the Śakti who is inseparable from Him; next to it, ya the individual self; the one before śi, namely, ma accompanied by the visarga denotes the bondage, mala and the letter before that, namely, na refers to the power consisting of the benevolent and graceful look of the guru and the [subsequent] initiation (dīkṣā) which removes the bondage.

Thus the total meaning comes to this: [One] should meditate that Śiva with His own inseparable Śakti puts an end to the three-fold mala of the individual self.

Otherwise by pañcāksarī either the Pranava or the Prāsāda is denoted. In the first one a, u, ma, bindu and nāda are the [five] letters; in the second, ha, au, ma, bindu and nāda are the letters. It should be understood that while the follower of the Veda recites the first one the Śaiva recites the second one and meditates on Śiva. Even here by pañcāksarī the [presiding] deities should be taken to be mentioned as mere word is never meditated. Therefore Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Īśvara and Sadāśiva are respectively denoted by the five syllables a, u, ma, bindu and nāda; the five Śakti-s that perform the five acts, namely, creation, sustenance, reabsorption, concealment and grace are denoted by the Prāsāda-pañcākṣari. [Accordingly] the meaning [denoted and meditated] by the first mantra is that Śiva by controlling the five Kāraṇeśvara-s [Brahmā, etc.] mentioned earlier brings forth the worldly experience as well as grace for the individual selves based on mala, māyā and karma. In the second one it should be meditated that the [five] powers of Śiva controlling the three guṇa-s and the two māyā-s (māyā and the mahāmāyā) performs creation, etc. for the selves. [Thus] by this [ninth] sūtra jīvan-mukti is explained. (9)

Now [in the next sūtra] the reasonableness of the means of final liberation that are set forth [in the previous sūtra] is explained – with Śiva, etc.

The accomplished self that has attained oneness with Śiva with his very existence dependent on Him and [thereby] untouched by mala, māyā, etc., is endowed with the experience of his self. (10)

By siddhi – accomplishment – the complete control of the internal organ is meant; he who possesses that is the accomplished one – siddha. Because of this he has realised his oneness – non-difference from Śiva; because of that he is untouched – become himself free from – mala – ānava, māyā and karma. Because of that [again] he is completely dependent on Him – all his activities are dependent on Śiva. Because of their oneness all the acts of Śiva have become his acts. He becomes endowed with the experience of his self – experience of his own self which has realised its non-difference from Śiva. (10)

If this [realisation] is [felt to be] unreasonable [the following sūtra] shows devotion to Śiva – for the two eyes, etc.

Just as for the eyes [and other sense organs] the self is the guide [so also] Śiva is the guide for the self. Therefore [one should] have supreme devotion towards [Śiva], his benefactor. (11)

The self is the guide – informer – for the two eyes; here eyes denote by extension other sense organs also. For that self Śiva is the guide who informs it by piercing the [cover of mala by associating it with] kalā, etc. Because of this reason one should have supreme and firm devotion towards Śiva, the highest benefactor who grants both worldly enjoyment and liberation to the self. Devotion [also means] internal worship which is worshipping, sacrificing and meditating [Śiva] in [one's own] heart-lotus, navel and centre of the eye-brow respectively. (11)

That he who is incapable of doing all these may resort to external forms of devotion is explained [in the sūtra]— for the sake of liberation, etc.

For the sake of liberation one having resorted to virtuous ones should take on [their] habits and dresses; also [he should resort to] the abode of Śiva. Thus should one know the śaiva views established in the [text of] Śivajñānabodha. (12)

For the sake of liberation – here the dative form [of the word mukti] is used in order to drive home the sense ‘for the sake of’. To the virtuous ones – those preceptors who follow the Vaidikaśaiva system; [that is] having resorted to the virtuous ones and taking them to be one’s guru one should wear their attire [such as] holy ash, rudrākṣa beads, etc. Here [advising] the usage of the attire, etc. [of those virtuous ones] is irrespective of one's birth, character and occupation in life.

To the abode of – Śiva by implication it means the Śivalinga and other statues [installed for worship in the temple] just as [the statement] “Cots are crying” implies that the babies [that lie on the cots] are crying. By virtuous ones is meant the preceptors of Śaiva system; by [their] attire] holy ash, rudrākṣa beads, etc. are meant and by the temple of Śiva the Śivalinga and other statues installed [for worship] there are meant.

It should be noted that in this verse the way of caryā is spoken of; in the previous one the way of kriyā is explained; in the one previous to that the way of yoga and in the one preceding that the way of jñāna are explained.

That in the twelve sūtra-s the nature of the three categories – the Lord (Pati), the individual self (Paśu) and the Bondage (pāśa) – and the means of liberation – the way of knowledge, of yoga, of ritual and that of service – are explained is summed up [in the phrase] – in this way. In the scripture [called] Śivajñānabodha ascertainment of the above mentioned subjects of the Śaiva system is to be understood in this manner [as explained above] and not otherwise.— in a different manner.

Thus everything has been explained clearly.

Here ends the brief commentary composed by Śivāgrayogi the preceptor who has transcended the varṇa and āśrama and [who] is the protector of Śaiva system.
